HEADLINE: EPA CITES NELSON GALVANIZING OF LONG ISLAND CITY FOR VIOLATIONS
OF FEDERAL ENVIRONMENTAL LAWS; PROPOSES $1.26 MILLION IN PENALTIES

DATELINE: NEW YORK, Sept. 18

BODY:

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has initiated an enforcement action against Nelson Galvanizing of Long Island City, N.Y. for violations of two environmental laws. Through the joint efforts of two programs areas, EPA has initiated action against the company under the federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act and the Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act (EPCRA).

"This enforcement action is more focused than our traditional approach to environmental enforcement," said EPA Regional Administrator Constantine Sidamon-Eristoff. "It is our expectation that by commencing these separate enforcement actions simultaneously, attention will be focused not only on the need to comply with separate regulatory requirements, but also on areas of possible improvement in the company's environmental management and control systems."

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) regulates the treatment, storage and disposal of hazardous waste. During an inspection at the Nelson Galvanizing facility, EPA found several violations of RCRA, including storage of waste in an unsafe manner, failure to close containers holding hazardous waste, and the lack of training for workers. EPA is proposing a $1.21 million penalty.

Under the Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act, facilities which manufacture, process or "otherwise use" certain quantities of chemicals designated by EPA, must submit a form which includes information about chemical use and emissions. EPA found that Nelson Galvanizing failed to submit the appropriate forms for sulphuric acid, sodium hydroxide solution and zinc compounds for calendar years 1987 and 1988. A fine of $54,000 is proposed.

"I am very pleased with the importance and timing of these enforcement actions," said Sidamon-Eristoff. "Multi-media inspections and enforcement are a better way of doing business. We intend to continue these initiatives in the future."

Nelson Galvanizing has undertaken a removal action under the federal Superfund program at its facility. The firm has disposed of thousands of gallons of waste acids, tons of iron sulfate salts, tons of contaminated soil, and tons of excavated construction and demolition waste. The firm is also repairing its facility and is developing a plan to assure

HEADLINE: EPA orders Long Island City firm to clean up chemical hazards

DATELINE: NEW YORK

BODY:

In response to a Federal order, the owners/operators of the Nelson Galvanizing facility at 11-02 Broadway in Long Island City, N.Y. have hired a cleanup firm to reduce the threat of a chemical incident due to the improper handling of hazardous substances at the facility.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has been working closely with the New York City Department of Environmental Protection (NYCDEP) to bring about a cleanup of the facility.

The Nelson Galvanizing Co. facility is characterized by hazardous conditions and has a history of chemical spills. The company has now agreed to sign a consent order with EPA the terms of which address the cleanup procedures and responsibilities.

If the owners/operators had not agreed to the terms of the order, EPA was ready to undertake the work using Superfund, the federal program to clean up sites that pose an existing or potential chemical threat to the public and/or the environment.

EPA Regional Administrator Constantine Sidamon-Eristoff said, "The chemicals and conditions inside have created a high potential for a release of dangerous substances into the environment.

"EPA and New York City officials will oversee the cleanup operation and monitor the work inside the building very closely. It is our policy that those responsible for creating a problem such as this must pay to correct it," Eristoff added. New York City Department of Environmental Protection Commissioner Albert F. Appleton said, "Through a pattern of neglect and disregard for public health, the owners and operators of the Nelson Galvanizing facility in Long Island City have created an environmental situation which requires immediate cleanup action. Repeated orders from the city to take extensive measures to remedy the situation have been largely ignored by

Nelson Galvanizing. The city and federal governments are now cooperating to bring about a positive and constructive response from Nelson Galvanizing, and at this time it appears to be working. We shall continue to work with EPA until a full cleanup of the Nelson Galvanizing site has been completed.''

These individuals are now fully cooperating with federal and city agencies to remove the hazardous chemicals.

EPA's preliminary evaluations of the site revealed that as much as 10,000 to 15,000 gallons of bulked acids and caustic materials were being stored in leaking and corroded containers, stacked in a haphazard and precarious fashion.

Under the terms of EPA's order, the Nelson Galvanizing Inc., Nelson Foundry Inc. and John T. Sweeney Jr., agreed to direct their cleanup contractor to use an expeditious, sequenced approach to the problems posed by the site: first, detailed site assessment and chemical identification, then sampling to characterize type and concentration of materials. This will be followed by contractual arrangements for proper off-site disposal and then staging for actual removal and shipment to permitted disposal facilities.

EPA estimates that it will take up to 6 months for the company's contractors to complete this cleanup of the facility.

The site is an active metal galvanizing facility that has been the subject of NYCDEP enforcement efforts since 1988. Past spills and ongoing releases from deteriorated drums and tanks are evidenced by stains, puddles and corrosion inside and outside the building. In 1988, the NYCDEP was obliged to undertake extensive repairs to the adjacent sidewalk and storm drains due to acidic releases believed to have originated from the site which undermined these structures. The facility owners/operators had responded insufficiently to a city cleanup order aimed at reducing the hazardous conditions at the facility.
